

Javier Irigoyen-García is Associate Professor of Spanish Studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. His research focuses on the representation of race, ethnicity, and class difference in early modern Spain. He has published The Spanish Arcadia: Sheep Herding, Pastoral Discourse, and Ethnicity in Early Modern Spain (University of Toronto Press, 2013). His second book, entitled “Moors Dressed as Moors”: Clothing, Social Distinction, and Ethnicity in Early Modern Iberia (University of Toronto Press, forthcoming) explores the production, circulation, and consumption of Moorish clothing among both Old Christians and Moriscos.
